

Phlebotomy Careers at ST. Elizabeth

Phlebotomy is an excellent career path allowing individuals with phlebotomy certification, or those with an interest in the medical field but no experience, to begin their journey into healthcare.

Phlebotomists are responsible for performing venipunctures (blood draws) and other specimen collections on patients in all areas of the hospital both inpatient and outpatient. This fast-paced position requires excellent customer service skills, attention to detail and a desire for hands-on patient care. Shifts are available 24/7 with evening and weekend hours open for students that are pursuing their degrees and need flexibility.

St Elizabeth now offers a comprehensive phlebotomy training program designed to train both experienced phlebotomists and those that are just entering the medical field in proper collection techniques. The program provides classroom training as well as “real” patient interaction and allows individuals to develop their skills under experienced supervision while earning a paycheck. While in training, associates will learn to draw blood on all age groups, perform various specimen collections according to clinical laboratory standards and provide quality patient care.

Whether you are looking for a new lifelong career or for a doorway into another degree, phlebotomy provides both the exposure and the experience to get you on the path to your future.
